Prevention and detection of child sexual abuse

Child sexual abuse is one of the worst forms of violence against children and has a very high incidence. According to the Council of Europe, between 10 and 20% of children suffer sexual abuse during their childhood, without distinction related to social class. The impact of this reality extends over time, becoming a global public health matter.

The school is a privileged setting to detect and to respond to situations that threaten children's well-being. Thus, schools must ensure a safe environment for children and be able to identify any potential risks or vulnerabilities that children may present, in order to refer to the competent services and authorities.

What the program offers to schools

The program provides you with 5 different tools specifically oriented to meet the expectations and needs of the different target groups within the educational community (download via the website):

1. Report "Learning from experience". An analysis of former successful child sexual abuse prevention programs with key success factors.
2. Community prevention program. A tool for school principals to lead the implementation of the program within their school.
3. Teachers' manual. A tool for teachers with recommendations and activities to help children understand, prevent and protect themselves from abusive relations.
4. Toolkit for children and families, with strategies and recommendations to work at home.
5. A raising awareness material for the civil society, with key messages regarding the prevention and protection from child sexual abuse.

The project has been established by the Foundation Vicki Bernadet (coordinator ES), the
